Vanhattan: Well, is it? We found that culture enshrined in British material works of art: in the stately homes of your nobility, in the cathedrals our common forefathers built as the country houses of God. What did you do with them? You sold them to us. I was brought up in the shade of Ely cathedral, the removal of which from the county of Cambridge to New Jersey was my dear old father's big professional job. The building, which stands on its former sites, is a very fine one.

Or

Magnus: Well, what more can you ask? Don not let us fall into the common mistake of expecting to become one flesh and one spirit. Every star has its own orbit, between it and its nearest neighbor there is not only a powerful attraction but an infinite distance. When the attraction becomes stronger than the distance the two do not embrace: they crash together in ruin.
